No attempt is made to guard the packing house at night to prevent the killing of "downers" or injured cattle. No inspection of meat is made after it has passed the post-mortem examination or after it leaves the killing bed. The report declares that the federal inspectors are overworked and underpaid, and are without sufficient authority. While they have power to condemn meat, they have no authority to destroy it, but that work is left to the local inspectors, who are said to be former prize fighters and bartenders.

Dispatches from Washington represent Mr. Neill as saying he had found revolting and unwholesome conditions in the packing houses here. The floors were so filthy that the blood and grease occaed through and fell upon the good meat, which was to be canned. Employes walked around in the durt and afterward walked upon the carcasses to be used in interstate commerce. "The widow was paid $2,500 to keep her mouth shut, and was sent away.

"The Chicago editors became still angrier over the story of finding human fingers in canned goods. That such finds have been made can be vouched for by Charles Dexter Allen, of Dyker Heights. Brooklyn, and Henry Walker, of 35 Grand View avenue, Fort Jervis.

"I collected a mass of advertisements of chemicals for use in packing houses and sent them to President Roosevelt. They were the most convincing evidence of the boldness and audacity of the packers in doctoring their meats. A deodorizer was advertised, which was guaranteed to remove the odor from any meat no matter what the state of puirefaction.

RAISE FIRE INSURANCE RATES IN NEW ENGLAND

Insurance Exchange has voted to in-crease the rates on all classes of property throughout New England, but the exact amount of the increase and the places which will be affected are to be determined by the executive committee. The New York companies did not attempt to dictate to the committee which was sent there from Bos ton what the rates should be in New England, but they wanted a proper increase ordered. The question before the exchange was the method which should be used in making the increase.
